

a second longitudinal member having a hole adjacent one end thereof, said hole of said second longitudinal member being axially aligned with and positioned between said first and second holes of said first longitudinal member, said second longitudinal having a throat section formed at a side of said first hole opposite said one end of said longitudinal member; and a screw affixed to and extending through said first and second holes of said first longitudinal member and said hole of said second longitudinal member, said second longitudinal member being pivotable between a first position in side-by-side alignment with said first longitudinal member and a second position extending outwardly of said one end of said first longitudinal member in longitudinal alignment therewith, said throat section of said second longitudinal member overlying said throat section of said first longitudinal member when in said second position, said one end of said first longitudinal member having a generally U-shape.

8. (new) The temple bar of Claim 7, said first and second longitudinal members being of a metallic material.